$$ \backslash$ begingroup $$$  I don't think many mathematicians ever read a book just on how to do proofs, you just start reading math books and kind of get the idea of proofs as you go. I suggest just start with a good book on either abstract algebra or real analysis and just start reading from chapter 1 and see if you don't just pick up how it works ...

Do not use a program to give you answers, especially in math. Math is a subject that builds on itself over time. If you fail to understand a step of the learning, in time you will fail horribly. That being said, a program like chegg or wolfram alpha (which I HIGHLY recommend) is great to use as a learning supplement.
